Revelational Deep-tech for Our Future

When we set up our core-company, Glencal Co., Ltd. in 2002, company name was named after the US scientist Dr. Glenn Theodore Seaborg, to show our deep respects for his great achievements both in nuclear/quantum physics science and educational field. Since we started our business, nuclear and quantum fields have been always our focuses.

In 2009, we considered investment in venture companies utilizing technologies such as cold-fusion nuclear technology, photocatalysts, and fuel efficiency improvement devices by ionizing. At that time, we got interested in the phenomenon that hydrogen atoms covalently bonded to atoms with high electronegativity such as OH (including H₂O) and NH make hydrogen bond noncovalently. The reason why water and alcohol have much higher boiling points compared to compounds with similar molecular weights is largely due to the formation of hydrogen bonds between molecules.

At the beginning of the study, we were not sure, but we gradually made assumption that there might be a highly efficient drying technology using no / less heat and wind, and we conducted various experiments to prove this.

More essentially speaking, it can be said that rather than sticking to the ordinary idea of the substance 'water' from a chemical point of view, we have attempted to find and control certain reaction patterns by redefining the nature of 'water' based on the particle-level properties of electrons.

In 2013, an experimental ion engine, a small reactor, and a dryer were almost completed, and our highly efficient drying method was verified. Consequently, Mr. Nakaishi, and Ms. Masumi Maeno established Glencal Technology Co., Ltd. in 2013 in order to commercialize the technology with old friends including other current directors of the company.

Frankly saying, when GLT was established in 2013, two years before the SDGs were adopted by the United Nations, environmental awareness was not as high as it is today. However, since the adoption of the SDGs by the UN in 2015, the world has become more environmentally conscious, and ESG management has become essential for companies to be evaluated by investors, and companies will be removed from the supply chain if they do not manage their operations in an environmentally conscious manner. COVID-19 in 2019 and the Ukraine dispute in 2022 have driven prices of commodities such as fuel, food, feed, and fertilizer to rising around the world. As a result, reducing the amount of fuel used and upcycling what was previously wasted in the production process has changed from something it is better to do, to something we are forced to do.

Now, we would like to introduce RedoxMaster® technology, as a revolutionary drying technology developed by Glencal Technology Co., Ltd.

It is a completely new and unconventional drying technology that dries organic materials at an overwhelmingly low cost (approximately one third to one twentieth) compared to conventional technologies, while significantly reducing carbon dioxide emissions (approximately 40% to 80% less CO₂ emissions), at low temperatures (20°C to less than 100°C) and quickly (several hours to one day) without carbonizing or oxidizing them.

This feature generates significant added value.

For example, in the drying treatment of strained lees of coffee beans, apple juice, green tea, the moisture content can be reduced to below 12.5%, a level at which rotting does not proceed, while minimizing damage to polyphenols, fiber and other valuable components in the wastes. Food residues treated with RedoxMaster® retain these valuable ingredients and are easily stored and transported over a long period of time. As a consequence, the waste can be utilized as a high-quality raw material for animal feed, supplements, fertilizers and food.

RedoxMaster® does not only reduce drying treatment costs, but also utilize the treated residues as high-value-added valuable products.

BRINGING RESTAURANTS CLOSER TO YOU

Krishna's journey to the top began in his hometown of Thanjavur, Tamil Nadu, India, where he was born and raised. Despite earning a degree in Mechanical Engineering from Shanmugha College of Engineering (currently SASTRA), Bharathidasan University, his true passion always lay in the tech industry. In fact, he even started a small IT service business while still in college.

Determined to make a name for himself in the field, Krishna headed to the vibrant city of Chennai after graduation. He quickly established himself as a skilled website designer and developer, using his expertise in ASP and HTML. When the dot com crash hit, Krishna saw it as an opportunity to dive deep into the world of CRM and landed a coveted job at IBM Bangalore as a Siebel CRM Application Consultant. This role even took him on a trip to the Netherlands for a special project.

In 2006, Krishna felt it was time for a change and made the move to Singapore. Over the next few years, he worked for various businesses in different industries, including BFSI, Telecom, and Insurance. This diverse experience allowed him to gain valuable knowledge of cultural and procedural differences across countries.

After amassing a wealth of experience in the tech industry and experiencing a great deal of success and growth, Krishna knew it was time to start his own venture. He returned to Singapore and co-founded deliver.sg, the go-to online food delivery marketplace trusted by consumers across the country. As the Chief Technology Officer, Krishna played a crucial role in its success.

But Krishna's accomplishments don't end there. He's also a digital strategist, investor, and multipreneur, running multiple companies in both Singapore and India, including Shivam Restaurant and Aromas Restaurant in Singapore, Pindot in Singapore and India, Box O Mania (Cloud Kitchen) in India, Cybersoft Media in India and Virtual India in India.

"I am proud to have achieved so much as an entrepreneur in both Singapore and India," says Krishna, owner and manager of multiple companies in the two countries. "Not only am I an NRI, but I've built a thriving empire in both of my homelands."

And being a visionary and as he is a person who always has an eye for unique startup ideas, Krishna has invested in a early-stage startup called Start Insights that helps early-stage founders on their fundraising journey.

He also adds and emphasizes his extension of greatness, by stating that "All these could've been highly impossible without my ever-caring parents, a supportive wife, my lovable daughter and my dearest friends".

The founder, Jhansi Rani Vedachalam, is a successful cosmetologist who started her brand, right from humble beginnings.

Growing up in Chennai, Tamil Nadu, Jhansi had to constantly face ridicule regarding her appearance which made her conscious about herself. Dark spots and pimples were most frequent on her skin which were used against her to mock her appearance. To overcome the insecurity, she took up sports like boxing and hockey. Unfortunately, that ruined her skin further. Further, with a profession in IT firms like Workdbank IBRD, Visa and Microsoft, her professional life took flight but it still made her feel incomplete because of the skin issues she faced. Luckily, her saving grace was not that far away.

Success of Jiore Skincare

By engaging with customers through feedbacks and testimonials that allow them to share the views, issues and before and after pictures of using Jiore products, the brand has become quite popular on various social media platforms. Even though she had to procure all her savings in order to get the finest ingredients, it was all worth it in the end.

The numbers game & future

With a 70% success rate since its inception, Jiore is fairing well in the skincare industry in India. Surprisingly, most of its consumers are men and hence the products sold are unisex, to address the issues of men and women. The brand has plans to establish kiosks in major outlets in India, and increase its delivery channel, not just here but also abroad.

Jiore has made a turnover of Rs. 4 crores in just 1 year. They expect a better success rate in the second quarter as they garner more appreciation for the idea behind the entire brand. It is a delight to see how customers are still placing orders on Jiore, despite the lockdown. Instead, their sale for essential soaps and body washes have only increased by 30%.
